CENSUS 2020: Between March 12 and 20, households will begin receiving official Census Bureau mail with detailed information on how to respond to the 2020 Census online, by phone, or by mail. When you respond to the census, you'll tell the Census Bureau where you live as of April 1, 2020.

Why is the 2020 Census important? An accurate census will drive decisions that will affect economic investments in communities in Washington and the weight of its political influence until 2031. For every 100 households missed in the 2020 Census count, the state could lose up to $5.8 million, which would affect the ability to support children, veterans, senior citizens and middle- and low-income families adequately. An accurate count of Washington's communities will ensure the fair distribution of taxpayers' funds and political representation.

The Constitution mandates a decennial census. Article I, Section 2 of the U.S. constitution establishes the basis for a complete population count every 10 years in order to determine the number of Congressional representatives that each state gets. The 14th Amendment makes clear that the count must include "the whole number of persons in each state."

Census data is used for political and administrative representation. Washington state uses the data to draw boundaries for every level of government down to the school districts. Due to growth in the state between 2000 and 2010, Washington was also able to send an additional representative to Congress. While the state is unlikely to gain another seat in the 2020 Census, an accurate count is important to ensuring fair and equal representation at all levels.

Federal, state, and local government agencies rely on census data for planning and delivering education, economic development and employment, health, and transportation services. In FY2016, Washington state received $16.7 billion from 55 federal programs based on census data. It is estimated that 300 federal programs allocate funds based on census-derived statistics.

But, it is not just governments that use census data to plan, budget, and make policy. Businesses use the census to decide where to build factories, offices and stores, which creates jobs. Developers use the census to build new homes and revitalize old neighborhoods. Local governments use the census for public safety and emergency preparedness. Transportation planners use the census to decide on public transit routes. Citizen organizations rely on census data to identify community needs, request and fund programs, monitor trends and assess program effectiveness. Residents use the census to support community initiatives involving legislation, quality-of-life and consumer advocacy.
